Elf woman in her 40s. An elite warrior, but carries herself like a runway model most of the time. And she smokes a pipe! Outwardly calm, but sometimes reveals the worry or anger beneath. And at the end, she becomes a serene, emotionless creature.

FRAYA

The Core has limitless power, but that power must be controlled. The grand arcanist, Serion, has that tragic duty. Why tragic? When gods fought against gods long ago, they released catastrophically powerful magic. Serion captured that magic within the Core. But to control the Core, Serion had to become the Core.

FRAYA

Kaidun captured my attention when we were defending Kaiator against the argons.

FRAYA

He was a warrior with a knack for killing argons--my kind of soldier, in other words.

FRAYA

Later, Kaidun arrived in Allemantheia as an emissary of the amani. I asked him why he came here. He told me I already knew the answer.

FRAYA

Then Kaidun gave me this necklace. As long as he lives, the gemstone shines.

FRAYA

Every day, I check. Every day, it still shines.

FRAYA

The elders forbid me to leave, suspecting my rescue would have a...personal component. Thus, I turn to you.
