Because Castanics are so independent, it's often difficult for them to ask for aid, much less accept it. This is the default mindset, particularly with older Castanics, the ones less involved in the work of the Federation. The role-playing struggle will be shown through reluctance in speech, but grudging acceptance should weigh more. A pinch of personality-flavoring, not a stock-potful will do nicely. Castanics aren't crippled by their desire to be independent and self-reliant and Castanic members of the Federation are much more likely to view quests as handing out assignments. And in Castanic society, everyone does their part.

HASMINA

My name's Hasmina. The Mysterium sent me here, but I would have come anyway. They got my sister...I was too late.

HASMINA

But I learned something--something useful--while I was exacting some revenge.

HASMINA

The Three Towers are where the argons store all the life energy they extract from people like my sister.

HASMINA

Then that monstrous bird-creature delivers the energy to each argon encampment.

HASMINA

Thanks to you, this tower is useless to them. I could stay and kill more argons, of course...

HASMINA

But that's not going to bring my sister back. We should report to Kaia. After all, we actually have good news for once.
